A New Vision of Peacemaking: and the doors it opens...

The biblical word that we translate as “Peace” is Shalom. But this word, used so often by Jesus and his disciples, the prophets before and the early church after, means much more than our word “Peace.” It means “total well being” – ecological, physical, psychological, spiritual. And this can be experienced only in community in which justice, nonviolence, universal hospitality, and mutual respect prevail.

The gospel calls the Church to work for the creation of such a community in all it does. That is also an apt description of LPF’s mission: to use every area of Christian life together – worship, education, fellowship, and action – to teach how to foster Shalom, as well as how it can help us oppose violence and injustice. LPF endeavors to share effective assistance in each area. For example:

1. Worship offers many opportunities to engender Shalom in our life together. LPF supplies thoughtful Peace Prayers and Sermons, full Service Guides, and a Peace Calendar to help make peace visible throughout the church year.

LPF’s 60-page “Peace Worship Packet” offers dozens of prayers, songs, litanies, sermon helps, and services…. Two LPF leaders wrote the first “Day of Prayer for Peace” bulletin insert used in more than 10,000 churches worldwide.

2. Adult education, Sunday School, youth group: The gospel calls us to educate and motivate one another to live lives of Shalom and to explore issues that call for action, like ending our perpetual wars abroad, those at home that fill our prisons, and other challenges like the ones in section 5, →. LPF offers many tested, effective Shalom resources:

• LPF’s “What is Christian Peacemaking?” for example, explores a wide range of biblical texts on Shalom with results most people find eye-opening. Used by 600 congregations to date, it is one of 12 LPF PeacePoints. Each offers a discussion guide, handouts, and leader tips for effective use in forums or groups. Others delve into “Just War, Just Peace,” “Conflict Education,” and other issues.

• “What Brings Security?” is a computer activity, freshly updated for 2015, that’s gotten raves for illuminating our deeply distorted U.S. defense and social priorities. The result is an engaging, powerful, and easy-to-present adult or youth dialogue. A million people have used LPF computer activities!

• Resources for Women: We are responding to the need for concise, popularly written aids from a Lutheran perspective with ideas for exploration and action. LPF’s Women’s Initiative offers “Stopping Violence Against Women and Girls,” “Women’s Path of Hope,” “Nurturing Peace: Gifts of Women;” a “Video Gallery;” and “Inspiration from Women.”

• “The Path of Hope” offers inspiration from the lives of everyday people throughout history bringing change to their world through nonviolence. This resource and 12 effective, tested activities have touched tens of thousands of Lutherans at Youth Gatherings, Global Mission Events, adult forums, etc.

What these and other LPF group activities have in common is that they are all participatory. They don’t tell people what to think but help them explore, discuss, and find their own way.

3. In our fellowship: Another great place to experiment with Shalom is in the way we interact, work together, conduct our meetings, address conflict, etc. While it can be challenging, it has great potential for exploring the meaning of Shalom, and for strengthening discipleship and leadership in our roles as family members and co-workers, neighbors and citizens.

LPF offers a variety of activities for nurturing and supporting more effective ways to do this: for example, our forums on “How to Be a Bridge in a World of Walls” and “Conflict Education.” Both offer insights and activities to help participants try out new skills, as well as examples of further resources and links.

4. In our giving: We can encourage financial support for peace projects and groups like LPF from friends, our congregation, and by designating LPF for Thrivent Choice Dollars.

5. In the world: Shalom, if it is real, moves us to action. This can include service work, such as volunteering in a food bank, meal program, or shelter in our community. It should also lead to our speaking up about specific injustices and conflicts.

We can challenge hunger and poverty which are frequently causes and/or effects of violence; advocate for cutting U.S. military budgets, and increased funding for education, the poor, ecological sustainability; call for reducing violence in the media; reining in the misuse of drones; offering support for Conscientious Objectors; effective gun control…. Advocacy alerts, blogs, sample letters, etc. from Lutheran Peace Fellowship, Lutheran Advocacy, and other sources can help.

There are many ways to encourage such action, e.g.: offering prayers on peace concerns; sharing alerts after worship; presenting an adult forum in our church; helping with an advocacy table for coffee hour to assist congregation members in communicating with elected officials. Such efforts, in turn, can lead to organizing a congregation peace & justice group that can sustain our efforts.

Putting it all together: We seek to challenge not just a particular war or conflict, but also the militarism that undergirds it. Similarly, we look for connections between computer game violence or returning veterans’ issues and the larger “culture of violence” in the U.S. The core mission of LPF is to oppose violence and injustice; to expose their root causes; and to respond to the call to practice and share the way of Jesus, the biblical vision of Shalom, of justice and active nonviolence: our best hope for lasting change.
